

COORDINATORS

MAIN PARTNER

OFFICIAL SPONSORS

INSIDE DATA

“THE GOOD GOVERNANCE RECIPE” (MOVIE #4)

TIMING	DATA/CONCEPT	SOURCE
01:00 – 04:50	Participation and inclusiveness Equity Following rule of law Transparency Accountability and enforcement Effectiveness, good results Responsiveness, taking into account local conditions	WWDR 2015, p52: “The key principles for enhancing effective governance include: participation, accountability, transparency, equality and fairness, efficiency and effectiveness, and rule of law (FAO , 2013b). Following these key principles helps ensure social justice, equity and a long-term perspective on the protection of natural resources. WWDR 2003, p372, 373 and 378: “...how decisions are made and to what extent citizens can participate in decision-making processes....” “..all groups in society, both men and women, should have opportunities to improve their well-being.” “...It is essential that legal and judicial systems protect the rule of law and human rights....” “...governments, the private sector and civil society organizations should be accountable to the public or the interests they are representing.” “Water governance issues are also dependent on properly functioning legal and judicial systems and electoral processes. For example, legislative bodies made up of freely and fairly elected members and representing different parties are important to popular participation and accountability...” “Responsiveness: institutions and processes

COORDINATORS

MAIN PARTNER

OFFICIAL SPONSORS

TIMING	DATA/CONCEPT	SOURCE
		should serve all stakeholders and respond properly to changes in demand and preferences, or other new circumstance” UN WWAP Technical paper: Sex-Aggregated indicators for water assessment, monitoring and reporting, p14: It is now widely understood that women are primary stakeholders in the water and sanitation sectors and that men and women typically express different priorities, uses, and needs... gender analysis is an essential lens for understanding the provision, management, and conservation of the world’s water resources. The pivotal role of women is increasingly recognized at all levels of development activity